According to legend, the beautiful Chang'e was married to an expert archer, Hou-Yi. At that time, ten suns rose together in the skies and scorched the earth, causing hardship for the people. Hou-Yi shot down nine of them, leaving just one sun, and was given the elixir of immortality as a reward for his heroic gesture. Unwilling to take it, as he did not want to gain immortality without his beloved wife, he asked Chang'e to keep it safe. However, while Hou-Yi went out hunting, his apprentice broke into their house and tried to force Chang'e to give him the elixir. She refused. To prevent him from taking it, she drank the elixir herself...

Ever since, Chang'e has been on the moon waiting to see her greatest love again. To this day, at Mid-Autumn Festival, Chinese people offer gifts to the Moon Goddess for love, relationships, peace and prosperity.
